for developing research on the SDI program, popularly known as "star wars," was that Moscow was already well ahead in developing space defense systems such as lasers, nuclear particle beams and kinetic energy weapons.

"They now possess groundbased lasers that could interfere with our satellites," he said, "and by the late 1980s they could have prototypes of ground-based lasers able to hit ballistic missiles."

Mr. Weinberger rejected arguments by some European opponents of the program that such a system would shield only the United States and effectively "decouple" American defense from that of its European allies.

ROME (UPI) - Yelena G. Bonner met with Prime Minister Bettino Craxi on Thursday and called the 35-minute meeting at the Chigi Palace a tribute to her husband, Andrei D. Sakharov, the Soviet dissident.

Mrs. Bonner, 62, who was allowed to leave the Soviet Union for the West to seek medical advice about problems with her eyes and heart, arrived Monday in Italy for medical treatment. She said she probably would leave Saturday for Boston to consult heart specialists.

Qadhafi Eases Support for Chad Rebel DAKAR, Senegal (Reuters) — Libya's leader, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, seeking for a way to end the stalemate in Chad's 20-year civil war, scaled down his commitment Thursday to former President Goukoun.

Oueddei, his rebel protégé in north Chad.

After a three-day visit to Senegal for talks with President Abdou Diouf, chairman of the Organization of African Unity, Colonel Qadhafi told reporters he was prepared to treat Mr. Goukomi and Chad's president, Hissène Habré, as rivals on "the same footing of equality."

Colonel Qadhafi, who in 1983 sent an estimated 6,000 troops into northern Chad to aid the rebels, hes until now insisted that Mr. Goulkouni was the only legitimate Chadian head of state. But he said no one could end the war "without recognizing the preponderant role of Libya," which claims an area of desert territory in northern Chad known as the Aouzou

Weinberger Shifts on Military Reform

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Under pressure from Congress, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has said that he could accept changes in the structure of the U.S. armed forces, including proposals to strengthen the authority of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The comments, in a letter Wednesday to senior members of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, reflect a significant change in position. Testifying before the committee on Nov. 14, Mr. Weinberger opposed major changes in military structure.

In his letter, he noted that the Joint Chiefs of Staff helped the defense and helped supervise the way such orders were carried out. "The role of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in this regard should be strengthened," he wrote, "provided it is clear that he acts on behalf of the Senior Defense Department officials suggested Wednesday that the barring of General Dynamics would be lifted before the production of vital arms was affected. Without the extension of the bid deadline, contracts for the submarines would have gone to Newport News Ship-Should Be Suspect building in Virginia, which, navy officials asserted, could have increased its price at the last minute.

Walesa Answers Summons in Gdansk

WARSAW (Reuters) - Lech Walesa answered a summons Thursday to the prosecutor's office in Gdansk, where he was asked to read an account of investigations of charges that he had slandered electoral officials, a spokesman for Mr. Walesa said.

The spokesman said that Mr. Walesa, the former leader of the Solidarity union movement, and his lawyer spent about three hours reading 70 pages from a 1,000-page file, and would continue the reading Friday.

Mr. Walesa has been accused of slandering Polish election officials by doumi, the PLO foreign policy spokesman, said Wednesday. Mr. Klinghoffer, 69, was on the Mediterranean cruise ship with his wife when it was hijacked Oct. 7.

U.S. Weighs Basing Anti-Hijacking Team Abroad

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The United States is considering stationing military anti-hijacking specialists overseas because of their failure to get to the scene quickly enough in the hijacking of an Egyptian airliner to Malta and of the Achille Lauro cruise ship.

Reagan administration officials said Wednesday that a debate had arisen within the government over the policy of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to keep the anti-terrorist units at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and not send them overseas except during emergencies.

"Maybe," he replied and the remark drew general laughter.
Admiral Poindexter, whom Pres-

Since 1983 he has served as the deputy to Robert C. McFarlane and has been been known as an insider. But those who know him describe him as intelligent, ex-tremely hard working, politically conservative and personable.

Admiral Poindexter, 43, is the fourth national security adviser to serve Mr. Reagan and the 14th to hold the position since it was estabished in 1953 under President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

He graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1958. "He was not only first in his class at the Naval Academy but also brigade com-mander of the class, Mr. Reagan

As Mr. McFarlane's deputy, Admiral Poindexter was more involved in regional issues and crisis management than arms control. But administration officials said he was knowledgeable and active on arms control issues.

Admiral Poindexter headed the Security Council's so-called crisis pre-planning group. New York Times Service WASHINGTON — In his apcointment of Vice Admiral John M. Poindexter as his national security adviser, President Ronald Reagan has cemented the power of Donald T. Regan, the White House chief of staff, over the domestic and foreign policy apparatus of the White House, administration officials said.

By all accounts Mr. Regan's emergence as the most powerful figure in the administration after the president will mark a faint but perceptible shift in White House Officials point out that with the resignation of Robert C. McFarlane as national security adviser, reportedly after tense wrangles with the chief of staff, the White House now has one focus of power in Mr. Regan.

Beyond this, officials predicted clashes between Defense Secretary that Mr. McFarlane's replacement by his deputy, Admiral Poindexter, means that Mr. Regan will now play a far more active role in foreign policy matters. This is an area in which Mr. Regan has treaded softly, partly because of his own inexperience and partly because of Mr. McFarlane's control over national security policy in the White

In a brief telephone interview, Mr. Regan sought to play down the possibility that he will increase his involvement in foreign policy. "I don't think I'll play any different role than I did," he said.

Mr. Regan said he was "worrying about" numerous domestic issues such as tax simplification and deficit reduction legislation.

"But quite obviously," he added, "I have to stay alert to the foreign

Mr. Regan denied that his rela-tions with Mr. McFarlane had been poor. "Strangely enough I thought I had good relations with Bud and I hope to have a good relationship with John," he said.

Another official said that in a private conversation with Admiral Poindexter late on Tuesday, Mr. Regan said he would not hinder the national security adviser's access to the president or involve himself in every aspect of foreign policy. But Mr. Regan also said he viewed his role now as a bridge and counsel to the president on foreign policy, especially when decisions on national security had an impact on domestic political considerations.

"Regan is not, after all, a novice now in foreign policy," a White House official said. "He was involved before. He's intimately in-seems to lie not so much in its sporadic and generally ineffective military activities as in its appeal to many black South Africans as the vanguard of a new era free of racial inferiority.

The contest in South Africa, thus, seems in part a collision of moods: black militancy sensing a victory pitted against white resolve to engineer the country's future.

Police in South Africa Use Whips, Tear Gas to Break Up Church $ar{V}$ igils

The Associated Press JOHANNESBURG - Police using whips and tear gas broke up candlelight vigils for imprisoned anti-apartheid activists and dispersed thousands of mourners at a black girl's funeral, witnesses said

Pretoria reported stonings and gas-oline bombings late Wednesday and early Thursday in most of the mixed-race townships east of Cape

A spokesman denied charges that not patrols broke up the candlelight services without provocation. He said the gatherings Wednesday night were illegal and police moved in after their warnngs were ignored.

A witness said police fired tear gas Thursday morning to scatter out 5,000 mourners at the funeral of an 18-year-old girl shot by police last week in Soweto, the black township near Johannesburg.

Police said that they warned the crowd that the gathering violated rules under a state of emergency that limits funeral attendance to 50

Most mourners regrouped after the initial charge and the service went on, but police returned and fired more tear gas canisters to drive the mourners away from the dead girl's home, the witness said. In other incidents in Soweto. a

The Reverend Allan Boesak, a mixed-race religious leader, said he led a candlelight vigil Wednesday night at his church outside Cape Town. Some of the 700 people who attended went outside and were bit by tear gas from an armored police wehicle across the street, he said. "I just think the South African police once again have shown themselves to be the pigs that the people think that they are," said Mr. Boesak, who faces subversion charges and is free on bail. "There is absolutely no excuse for what happened here." Lieutenant Attie Laubscher, a police spokesman, said that about 200 people gathered outside Mr. Boesak's church and "police asked them to disperse. The majority did. Police then warned the rest who were standing around, and then used tear gas to disperse them."

The parish council sent a mes-sage to Louis Le Grange, South Africa's minister of law and order, demanding assurances that churches "may carry on with their worship without being threatened by your police.'

It called the police assertion that a warning was given before the tear gas barrage a "blatant lie."

Uganda Says Guerrillas Attacked 2 Barracks

The Associated Press

KAMPALA, Uganda - The military government has announced that guerrillas have unleashed a heavy artillery bombardment on two besieged army harracks in territory the insurgents control in southwestern Uganda.

The report Wednesday night on government-owned Uganda Radio coincided with verbal attacks between the two sides that have jeopardized peace negotiations. Kenvan officials mediating the talks in Nairobi had hoped an agreement would be signed this week.

The radio said the National Resistance Army "delivered over-whelming artillery gunfire" on the barracks in Masaka and Mbarara and other government positions. No details on casualties were given.

The radio quoted Uganda's head of state. Lieutenant General Tito Okello, as saying the leader of the guerrillas. Yower Museveni, "shall be held totally responsible for the consequences that may result."

The commission, headed by former judge and former Labor minister, Jim McClelland, was set up by the government in July last year after allegations that soldiers and aborigines had become ill from radiation exposure.

The inquiry, which gathered 10,000 pages of evidence from 400 witnesses at hearings in Australia and London, dismissed reports that four aborigines had been found dead at Maralinga

But it added that if aborigines were not killed or injured it was due more to good luck than good man-

The report said investigations at the Maralinga and Emu test sites had found unacceptably high levels of plutonium radiation.

The commission recommended that legislation should be amended so that compensation was available not only to members of the armed forces but also to civilians and aborigines.

The report also criticized Sir Robert Menzies, then Australia's prime minister, for leading test sites to Britain without consulting

It said the decision was made without the benefit of any scientific knowledge of the hazards involved and apparently without Sir Robert being informed of more than a broad outline of the British plans for a long-term program.

Commentators forecast that Britain would proceed with caution because any move towards paying compensation could open the way for claims from British servicemen who said they suffered injuries as a result of taking part in the tests.

Now for the Follow-Up

Israel has apologized guardedly ("to the extent that it did take place") for running an American spy in the United States. In a statement that was a long time coming, it promised that "if the allegations are confirmed, those responsible will be brought to account." The confirmation is evidently to be left to an internal government inquiry, not to an independent one. In the statement, no specific assurances were given that the United States would retrieve stolen documents or interrogate two Israelis with diplomatic immunity who left the United States last week before U.S. officials could question them - although side assurances have since been reported on both counts.

Secretary of State George Shultz called it an "excellent statement." Certainly it serves the purpose of minimizing frictions with the United States and curtailing the possibility of further disclosures potentially embarrassing to both sides. But it leaves much unsaid. Unless damaging popular suspicions are to be fed, the follow-up will have to be much more inclusive. The Israelis evidently feel that the fuller, more independent and more public the inquiry, the greater the chances of damage to the unity of their government as well as to the reputation of Israel and to the standing of its intelligence. The United States has another, conflicting set of interests: finding out what happened, who is responsible for it, how severe the security damage is and how comprehensive and widespread the Israeli operation was.

Spying on America, said the Israeli statement, "stands in total contradiction to our policy." Well - that is not quite right, either. The two countries have their own reasons for spying on each other plenty; these have nothing to do with being friends and everything to do with the way each defines its security needs.

But there is good reason to keep the forms of spying consistent with shared notions of propriety and common cause. In the Pollard operation, there was a loss of balance. Whether this was the work of a complicatous government or an uncontrolled rogue operator is interesting to Israelis and Americans in different ways. If an American passed secrets to the Israelis, he committed a serious crime. If Israelis conducted an intrusive intelligence operation, they committed a serious breach of the code of respect that ought to bind the two countries. That is what the Pollard affair is about.

The Makings of a Bhopal

Two thousand people were asphyxiated by the chemical that escaped a year ago from the Union Carbide plant in Bhopal, India. At the time, the lax training of the Indian staff and the excellent workplace safety record of the U.S. chemical industry suggested that no such accident was likely in America. Now that comforting inference seems too complacent.

Union Carbide officials assured Congress last March that "a Bhopal-type situation is inconceivable at Institute," the town in West Virginia where the company has a similar plant. But last Aug. 11 a chemical escaped from the Institute plant, injuring 135 people. And that was just one in a daily run of minor accidents involving toxic chemicals. A partial catalogue by the Environmental Protection Agency has tallied 6,928 accidents at American plants since 1980 — an average of five a day. Because the human suffering was so spread out, no one noticed the appalling cost: 139 deaths, 1,500 injuries, evacuation of at least 217,000 people. Many of these accidents involved the same kinds of neglect that caused the catastrophe at Bhopal - malfunctioning valves, overpressured tanks and unrepaired gauges. Safety training is taken seriously at many companies, like Du Pont, but at others it is little more than advice to wear a safety mask. An industry that condones so many small accidents is clearly vulnerable to catastrophe. especially when so many highly toxic chemi-cals are handled in plants situated in densely populated areas. All the ingredients for another Bhopal are present. Some 6,000 chemical plants operate in cities that house three-fourths of America's population. The plants handle and store so many toxic chemicals that no one has even begun to assess the risks. The EPA recently listed some 400 widely used chemicals of immediate hazard to human health. Yet some plants refuse even to reveal what toxic chemicals they keep. How can disaster be prevented? By better management and training in the industry; by emergency planning of local authorities; by making a federal agency responsible for safety. But the most effective prevention should come from the industry itself. Having protected its own workers so well, it ought to apply the same discipline to protecting the public

Another Regan Incident

It is too late to save the president's resigning national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, from what befell him at the White House. But there may still be time to save him from transformation by administration critics on the left into someone he never was - a kind of doomed and valiant closet dove shoved out by the forces of reaction and darkness. By about Friday, we should guess, the aforementioned dark forces will be striking back, countering that Mr. McFarlane, mourned by so many of the administration's ideological foes, can hardly have been the right man for the job.

Let us try a little pre-emptive strike here. Mr. McFarlane is no dove. He is a very conservative and sober-minded military officer turned civilian, who has become a specialist in national security policy. The job he had has always been a delicate one to fill and has regularly been redefined by those who held it. Some were more and some were less assertive, intrusive, imaginative, self-starting and egomaniacal. McGeorge Bundy, Walt Rostow, Henry Kissinger, Brent Scowcroft, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Richard Allen, William Clark you don't exactly find a pattern there.

Some of these men were more illustrious than Mr. McFarlane, but we can think of none who was more helpful to the president he served. This, we suspect, will be noted as time goes on. By the time Mr. McFarlane took the White House job, a major task awaited: to find a way to turn the fruits of Mr. Reagan's military buildup into actual policy options. He gave over a great deal of time and thought to this. Mr. McFarlane also had some successes as a manager and arbiter of departmental clashes. He has been the kind of public servant who is not fully appreciated until he is no longer around to do the countless quiet, essential tasks that an employer tends to take for granted. He has been that rarest of public officials, a loyal, honorable and unassuming man who was also intelligent and tough.

A near frantic effort has been mounted by persons close to the White House chief of staff, Donald Regan, to counter stories that his ma-

McFarlane's decision to leave. Both Mr. McFarlane and the president have dismissed the reports as nonsense. We wish they were nonsense. The muscling and manipulating were egregious, and they did have an effect.

Neither Mr. McFarlane's job nor that of Mr. Regan is subject to Senate confirmation, and a president has the widest possible discretion in choosing the persons be wants for them. Chemistry, as it is called, work habits, style and personal quirk all play a part, and for all we know Mr. Regan may suit Mr. Reagan's needs just fine. But from the outside it sure doesn't look that way. Mr. Regan's ascendancy has been one grating episode after another George Bush, Margaret Heckler, Robert McFarlane - just as his cabinet years were marked by open combat with others high up in the Reagan government. Mr. Regan is a very ambitious man. He is said to like to be seen in the right places at the right time. The stories are legion. At Geneva he had himself photographed draped over the back of the couch on which Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev were sitting. Mr. McFarlane is just the opposite, and you would think that the self-effacing man would have presented no particular chal-lenge or threat to the other. But it seems not to have been regarded by Mr. Regan that way.

Mr. McFarlane's successor is to be his deputy, Vice Admiral John Poindexter. That the choice evidently had to be agreeable to Mr. Regan as well as to the president puts a couple of extra bricks in the new fellow's knapsack. But Admiral Poindexter must know, from his time in the White House, how great is the president's need for someone capable of per-forming the crucial balance-wheel function defined and assumed by Mr. McFarlane. At the summit the president put himself in a way to move toward major policy decisions. But he has not yet made those decisions. In the absence of a McFarlane, the internal chemistry of the Reagan administration's policy pro-cess will be different. Let us hope it works.

1935: Business Assails the New Deal NEW YORK - Demanding that American business throw off the yoke of the New Deal, the National Association of Manufacturers has drafted a platform urging the maintenance of Constitutional guarantees, the preservation of freedom of enterprise, the maintenance of sound tax and financial policies by the government, and a search for security through economic progress rather than brain-trust theories. The businessmen, who recently heard their officers and others bitterly attack the New Deal from all angles, received the report [on Dec. 5] of the Resolutions Committee, couched in terms most critical of the Administration. Such terms as tyranny, raw deal and arrogance appeared frequently as speakers urged business to fight further regimentation.

Get on the Side of Certain Change in South Africa

BOSTON — A dispassionate observer of South Africa must see one certainty: Real change is coming. When, no one can say, but there is a ntum in events, a sense that the abused black majority cannot forever be denied its place in political life. That was the meaning when Win-nie Mandela spoke at a funeral for 12 blacks shot by the police in the town-ship of Manelodi. For 25 years she has been banned, jailed, forbidden to speak in public. Now she felt able to defy that ban — because the government might fear to move against her lest it arouse even more resentment. It was also the meaning when Elijah Barayi, president of the new Con-gress of South African Trade Unions, called for disinvestment by foreign anies and set a six-month deadline for an end to apartheid and white minority rule. Such a bold assertion of union power in politics would have been impossible even a year ago.

All this confronts U.S. policy with an urgent challenge: How does the United States associate itself with the profound movement that is taking place? How does it help change to come in a way that will produce an economically and socially healthy South Africa, friendly to America? The most obvious requirement is to identify with the process of change, with the end of racism. That seems so elementary that it should not have to be said. But it does, because U.S.

policy over the last five years has alienated the black majority in South Africa to an astounding degree. The Reagan administration's pol-

An Entirely New Policy for South Africa

WHAT is needed from the United States is an entirely new and more imaginative approach to South Africa. A policy must be crafted that not only recognizes and works with the current grim realities there, but also tries to ease the transition to an altogether different, albeit unknown, future in which blacks will take part in the government of their country. There is no longer any question that this change will occur in South Africa; the question is how, according to whose timetable and with what sort of outside involvement.

Only by establishing much more direct communication with the majority and by granting it far greater and more practical assistance can the United States hope to influence the course of events. In effect, a new, parallel set of diplomatic relationships is necessary. And only by taking further steps that risk hurting the pride of South Africa's current rulers can American leaders hope to win enough credibility among blacks to be listened to in the debate over the country's future—a debate that will have profound consequences in all of Africa, in the United States and in much of the rest of the world. - Sanford J. Ungar and Peter Vale, in the winter issue of Foreign Affairs.

Full Steam Ahead at a Snail's Pace

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — For Europe this has been the Year of the Snail. The efforts of the main European nations to pull together and reverse their industrial decline by streamlining the European Community have advanced at a snail's pace. On the bright side, though, it does seem that 1986 will not after all turn out to be the Year of the Mule. The threat of stubborn nationalism and paralysis of the EC's political machinery appears to have been lifted.

The Luxembourg summit, attend ed last Monday and Tuesday by heads of government of the present 10 Community members and of imminent newcomers Spain and Portugal, was of key importance in determining Enrope's future direction. Had it broken up in the same ill-tempered confusion as the previous sum-mit, in Milan last June, the outlook mit, in Milan last June, the outlook in for Europe would now be grim.

This time the summitteers refused to accept the idea of failure. They sweated out a deal in a final 15-hour negotiating session that had them rolling up their sleeves and peering with unaccustomed eyes at the small print. It was a marathon that showed their political commitment to cooperation and EC unity more firmly than any number of resounding speeches.

The package they produced is com-licated and still incomplete, with a number of loose ends left dangling. It is also modest in its achievements, considering that it had been billed as the first overhaul of the Community's legal framework, the 28-year-old Treaty of Rome. Yet for all its shortcomings the Luxembourg pact is prompting sighs of relief.

Failure would have had disastrous consequences. In the short term it would have meant that Spanish and Portuguese accession on Jan. I could plunge the Community into administrative chaos. But the summit's decision to introduce much more major-ity voting in the EC Council of Ministers should avert further statemates in which a single dissenting member state can hold up decisions affecting the whole Community.

In the medium term, the Luxembourg package means that the Community can probably meet its timetable for clearing away more than 300 hidden trade barriers so as to create a genuinely common market by 1992. A unified market is crucial to efforts to fight back against U.S. and Japanese technological supremacy. Ex-perts in Brussels say abolition of the protectionist devices that still shelter national markets would boost economic activity overnight by lopping 5 to 7 percent off many seiling prices and creating four million new jobs.

But it is in its long-term implications that the Luxembourg pact is most important. The price of failure this week could easily have been the disintegration of the Community.

Had the leaders thrown up their hands in despair over the unfamiliar would have been a serious political split between those nations that favor greater unity amounting to European federalism, and those who distrust anything beyond a customs union.

This divide between the six founding states and all the latecomers can never be fully bridged. France, West Germany, Italy and the Benefux countries will always be the soul of the Community, and the others will never share their idealistic vision of union. But the doubters, notably Britain, made symbolically important concessions at Luxembourg. They accepted that the Community will in future be legally defined as "an area without frontiers" rather than just as an economic marketplace without them, and they agreed that reference to automate the state of the sta reference to eventual monetary union be written into the Rome treaty.

The sort of haggling that was needed to fine-tune the summit's 45-page communiqué inevitably frayed tempers. President François Mitterrand at one point contemptiously re-proached the meeting for degenerat-ing into a "grocer's squabble." And when Chancellor Helmut Kohl backtracked on a pledge to Britain, a se-nior aide to Margaret Thatcher snapped to reporters that "the Germans have never stood firm since Arnhem." Meanwhile, the Italians are still withholding approval of the Luxembourg deal because it does not go far enough toward integration, id the Danes because it goes too far.

These are fringe problems. The do-mestic politics of Denmark and Italy are unlikely to unravel the broad agreement reached in Luxembourg. It is true that the agreement is far from a giant step forward, and also — that it does little to address Europe's very pressing difficulties of rising unemployment and waning industrial power. But it contrasts with the Community's earlier setbacks — and with the low point of the Luxembourg talks, when it was glumly remarked that "the snail seems to have turned around and is going backwards." LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cold War Language

I welcome Norman Davies's call for us to rid ourselves of misinformation about the Soviet Union ("Polish Isn't Russian; Russia Isn't America," Nov. 26.) One hopes that the recent summit at Geneva will help us to do that, if nothing else. But Mr. Davies must try harder. The "evil empire" language that President Reagan now. seeks to disown is still too much with us in Mr. Davies's comments.

We might begin by speaking about the Soviet Union, not Russia, as the country over which General Secretary Gorbachev presides.

To call the "greatest reformers in Russian history" also its "greatest tyrants" is not much help. This is the sort of language inflation that only makes matters worse.

To speak of the Soviets as characterized by militarism and glorification of war is an injustice to the many millions among them who want any-thing but war. We cannot afford such generalizations any longer. Let's keep trying. It is worth the effort, and indeed we dare not give up. Mr. Davies's approach can be improved, as I hope it will be when his next column appears. LAWRENCE KLIPPENSTEIN.

From Tangos to the Black Revue

ARIS — The new show at the Thé-âtre Musical de Paris, "Black and Blue," has been described as the first black revue to originate in Paris since Josephine Baker in 1925, a description that is inaccurate, patronizing and that misses an essential point: that this beguiling all-American revue was devised by two Ar-

"Tango Argentino" was Segovia and Orezzoli's second revue after a long collaboration in theater and opera. Their first was called "Flamenco Puro," and it is not as nervy as it sounds, Orezzoli says, for Argentines to claim that the flamenco they present logy was written by an Argentine. For us it is very familiar."

Nor should it seem odd on second, or perhaps on third, thought that Argentines should put on a synthesis of black revue from roughly the 1920s to the '50s and do it a lot better than U.S. products like "Sophisticated Ladies." As such Paris-based Argentines as Alfredo Arias of the TSE theater company have shown, no nation has wider — or more eccentric — cultural references, or a deeper belief in theatrical illusion. Nostalgia provides an impetus for art. "Nostalgia is very important," Orezzoli says. "In a sense we are very decadent. I dream of things that I have lived in art.

"We work with forms of art that are disappearing, we feel that anguish of things that lisappear. Since we are so attached to them, t is more than nostalgia — it is a need to be n touch with things before they go."

Song and dance have become so homogenized in the United States, thanks to television and Las Vegas, that when Segovia and Orezzoli went to there at the urging of Jean-Albert Cartier, director of the Théâtre Musical de Paris, who had suggested a black revue, they found many of the artists they auditioned were performing to a dull stereotype. "Black and Blue" is a mixture of vintage champagne and bathtub gin. Segovia and Orezzoli are proud that the cast has been urged to be themselves.

Some of the performers have begun to feel a kind of pride. You don't need to tell ies to be proud because they are, and with the tango the success was to make them realize that tango is worth preserving. With this show, I was worried about the problems of stereotypes which it is ideologically hard for a foreigner to understand. It is a very simple and traditional show, but we put it together to show the difference between something sterile and something alive."

In its vast scope and in several of its themes — possessive and violent love, guilt, escape and lies — "A Lie of the Mind" resembles Shepard's screenplay for "Paris, Texas" more than his recent plays; the film version of one of these, "Fool for Love," opened here this week, directed by Robert Alternated and Exercise Shepard and Exercise

As Don Shewey points out in his recent biography ("Sam Shepard," Dell Books), Shepard's cycle of family plays departed from his earlier work. by Samuel G. Freedman

And in a cycle of family plays stretching over a decade — and culminating with the New York opening of the newest one, "A Lie of the Mind" — Sam Shepard has painted a picture of domestic disharmony as striking as any that preceded it. The wastrel father of "Curse of the Starving Class," the Cain-and-Abel brothers of "True West," the incestu-ous lovers of "Fool for Love" have become indelible characters in the contemporary American theater. So, too, has Shepard staked his claim to the landscapes - both geographical and psychological — of the rootless American Southwest and the belea-

The mythology has to come out of real life, not the other way around. Mythology wasn't some trick someone invented to move us. It came out of the guts of man. And myths are related on an emotional level. They're not strictly intellectual programs."

ter of The Old Man, father of the lovers Eddie and May, assumes an even greater innortance than in the stage version. There The Old Man sat on the side of the stage, sipping whiskey and occasionally speaking. The Old Man of the film is a constant, active presence — a "Twilight Zone"-style gremlin or some kind of malevolent puppeteer. The film opens with The Old Man plaintively playing harmonica, as if to summon Eddie toward his confrontation with May. The Old Man steals tequila out of Eddie's truck, eavesdrops on Eddie's lights with May, and, until the secret of his two lives is revealed, delights in their destruction.

Shepard's actual "old man" was an even more complicated character. A World War Il flyer (like the offstage father in "A Lie of the Mind"), he attended college on the GI Bill, read Lorca, Neruda and Vallejo, taught high school geography and Spanish and studied at the University of Bogotá on a Fulbright scholarship. He could be a beguiling teacher and storyteller. He was also an alcholic, a father who fought bitterly with his son, a husband who frequently vanished.

"It was hit and miss, always hit and miss," Shepard's sister, Roxanne Rogers, remembers of the relationship between the playwright and his father. "There was always a kind of facing off between them and it was Sam who got the bad end of that. It was Dad who always set up if it was on or off. Dad was a tricky character - because he was a charismatic guy when he wanted to be: warm, loving, kind of a hoot to be around; and the other side was like a snapping turtle. With him and Sam it was that male thing. You put two virile men in a room and they're going to test each other." Shepard left home at 19. "There was this big fight with my old man," he recalled in a recent Newsweek interview, "and at that point I fled. And I thought, well, I'm just going to have to start over, pretend I don't even have a family." Rogers remembers that their mother. Jane, was sure S succeed as a writer, but that their father remained skeptical. He saw only one of his son's plays. The occasion typified the pica-resque and pathetic nature of his life. Once there was a production of Buried Child' in Santa Fe," Shepard said, "and my dad took it upon himself to go, and he was rolling drunk and started talking to the characters and stood up and made all this noise. He definitely struck up a relationship with the production. When the audience finally found out he was my old man, everyone stood up and gave him a standing ovation. He was in a state of shock."

S Shepard became a husband and a A father, as he approached middle age
—he is now 42—he sought reconciliation with his father. Sometimes the effort took the form of writing, like the speech in "Buried Child" in which a teen-age boy, Vincent, tells of looking in the mirror and seeing his face turn into his father's. Sometimes it meant father and son going out drinking together.

"Yeah, we had bouts of drinking." Shep-ard said. He drew breath, paused. "Strange." Again, he was quiet for a moment. "Because would always veer on that thing of accusa-

A Trimmer Sarah Caldwell Returns

by Andrew L. Pincus

OSTON - Sarah Caldwell is healthy and raring to go again — and so, she says, is her Opera Company of Boston.

A year ago, at age 60, the founder, artistic irector, guiding spirit and chief everything the Boston troupe came down with double neumonia. For two weeks nobody knew hether she would come out of the hospital ive. Denied the services of its chief conducor and stage director, the board of directors inceled the entire five-opera season. The year-old company embarked on what aldwell called "nightmarish times" during hich the house remained dark and a loyal all labored without pay to keep the organition going. It was, she said, "probably the ughest time the company ever had." Now the lights are going up again and aldwell is returning to the pit for the first ne since her recovery, staging and conicting five performances of Humperack's "Hansel and Gretel." Next month e new subscription season begins, offering . American premiere of Peter Maxwell ivies's "Taverner" and Janacek's "Makroulos Case" in the original instrumentall"n, along with Puccini's "Turandot" and terubini's "Médèe." In those works, too, Idwell is scheduled to double as conducand director. For 25 years, this has been accustomed role with the company. Caldwell is trim and chipper. Her face, · med by iron-gray hair, is unlined. She lks two miles every morning, plays tennis, swims. She has even come down with - and recovered from — tennis elbow.

"I feel marvelous," she said. "I'm enormously fortunate to have a wonderful doctor who not just saved my life but also supervised every phase of the activities that led to my getting stronger and better. I feel better than I've felt in 20 years."

Rejuvenation has also come to the opera company. Postponements of single productions were nothing new in the unpredictable process that puts opera on stage in Boston's old B. F. Keith Memorial, a former vaudeville palace. "Taverner." for instance, had been postponed from the 1983-84 season before being rescheduled again from last year's canceled season. But, alarmed by the loss of a whole season, the board and Caldwell have strengthened the artistic staff and fund-raising apparatus to prevent future blackouts or dependence on a single leader.

Forty new volunteers have come on board. They have gradually relieved the director of many fund-raising chores. Goals have been set and long-range planning is under way. Caldwell has added assistant stage directors to the roster, who, along with "cover" conductors, guarantee that "if I were to develop tennis elbow or tennis knee or tennis brain tomorrow, we'd be in fine shape." With the benefit of sickbed hindsight, Caldwell agreed that she had let the company, like herself, get run down. Fund-raising and guest-conducting, both of which she finally had to cut back on, had drained her. "Very stupidly," she said, "I tried to do all kinds of things, and I tried to do too many things at once, and so I got fatter and sicker and duller and less effective. And in a sense the sickness was a blessing in disguise because it gave me a chance to reassess what I was doing that was so stupid and the places vhere I needed help."

HE new season is one production smaller than usual. The Makropoulos Case" and "Taverner" are carryovers from last year, and Caldwell had done extensive preparation abroad for both. For Janacek's penultimate opera she went to Czechoslovakia, particularly the Janacek li-brary and museum in Brno, for copies of the manuscript and original score and parts.

She said that, like "Boris Godunov" in Mussorgsky's original version, Janacek's opera is more difficult in the original instrumentation, but that the sounds are "distinctive and characteristic and very special."

For Maxwell Davies's dramatization of the life of the 16th-century English composer John Taverner, Caldwell visited the composer - she calls him "a nifty friend" - at his home in the Orkney Islands to plan the production. He will also come to Boston to take a hand in the staging.

"Turandot," the opening production, will star Eva Marton in the title role and the Hungarian tenor Janos Nagy as Calaf. The Central Opera Theater of Beijing created the costumes at Caldwell's request, made while she was conducting the group in 1981, and members of a Boston Kung Fu academy will perform original choreography.

"Médée," to be sung in French, will close the season in June. Shirley Verrett will be the heroine — her first time in the role.

Caldwell has scheduled the U.S. premiere of Olivier Messiaen's "St. Francis of Assisi" for 1987. She plans Leonard Bernstein's "Candide" for next fall and has obtained the rights to the Bernstein opera "A Quiet Place," which she expects to do in a 1987 double bill with its companion piece, "Trouble in Tahiti."

The losses from cancellation of the season came to $812,000, according to the company president, Laszlo J. Bonis. He said that, with the stepped-up fund raising, which he called "encouraging" to date, the company hopes to reduce its deficit to $500,000 by June and eliminate it by June 1987.

Caldwell is boundlessly grateful to her board, staff, family and friends, who, she said, "have walked many a mile with me to make sure that Sarah didn't backslide" into her pre-600-calorie-a-day ways. Similarly, she said, subscribers have responded sympathetically to a plea that they turn their 1984-85 payments into donations and resubscribe.

paying again, for the new season.
"I've lost quite a bit of weight but I've got a lot more to lose," she observed with a chuckle and a trace of a Missouri drawl. "And the company has gained a certain amount of weight but has a lot more to Despite improvements, Caldwell said, opera performers in the United States "never really have enough time anywhere - anywhere - to rehearse, and they become facile. They learn how to learn music rapidly, and they learn how to sometimes look like they're

Following Hemingway's Footsteps Around Spain

"Spain," the woman of Pablo said bit-terly. Then turned to Robert Jordan. "Do they have people such as this in other countries?

There are no other countries like Spain." Robert Jordan said volitely. You are right." Fernando said. "There is no other country in the world like

"Hast thou ever seen any other country?" the woman asked him. "Nay," said Fernando. "Nor do I wish

by James M. Markham

HE words are spoken in the Sierra de Guadarrama, the small mountain range that rises from the sunbleached meseta that Madrid sits upon, before Robert Jordan blows up the bridge in "For Whom the Bell Tolls." It must have been wild country during the Spanish ingway would probably be dismayed by the sprawl of suburban housing developments and weekend A-frames that has crept into the evergreen oaks and pines of the Guadar-rama; he might find the funny little ski resorts at Navacerrada another tamme touch

Yet if he left the good roads and set off into the woods, he would still be able to encounter the wildernesses (though not the utterly fictional caves) where Robert Jordan, Maria, Anselmo, Fernando and the woman of Pablo played out their destinies. The Alpine Club, where Jordan rested for three hours, is still there; so is the bridge -- though it is stone not "a steel bridge of a single span." In a letter, Hemingway once called Spain "the last good country left." His Spain, in fact and fiction, is still a wonderfully unchanging place.

I lived in Madrid for six of the best years of my life. As a man writing in English for a living, I found my footsteps dogged by the giant presence of this writer who had done so much to fix Spain in the contemporary imagination. He wrote things that one was tempted to steal, or pilfer from around the edges, like this from "Death in the Afternoon" about a capital city that is perched at 2_190 feet: "Madrid is a mountain city with a mountain climate. It has the high cloudless Spanish sky that makes the Italian sky seem sentimental and it has air that is actively pleasurable to breathe."

One could not get around him, or even avoid some of the carnage he'd left behind. Hemingway drank and ate in as many places as George Washington slept in. By impaling Botin in the last pages of "The Sun Also Rises" with these words — "It is one of the best restaurants in the world" - he guaranteed this rustic spot off the Plaza Mayor an eternal clientele of American tourists and Spanish businessmen impressing their American contacts. There is nothing wrong with a restaurant patronized by American tourists, but if they are the only customers you might as well be eating your roast suckling pig in Boston.

Another Hemingway haunt in Madrid, the Cerveceria Alemana on the Plaza Santa Ana - a square where old men play chess with giant white and black pieces — retains its wooden facade, its blackened oil paintings and yellowing photographs of builfight scenes, which hint at its dwindling matador clientele. I know a number of American and English men, working at the fringes of journalism and literature, who systematically de-stroyed their livers by sitting for years at its sturdy tables downing Fundador brandies and talking Hemingway-tough about buils and women. I do not say that they would not have destroyed their livers without Papa Hemingway's inspiration, but it seems to me that his ghost was a spiritual accessory to their self-inflicted wounds.

Never having developed a hankering for Fundador brandy in such a hot clime, I slipped relatively unscathed out of Hemingway's Madrid in 1982 to the more subtle enticements of Bonn. But, though one can leave Spain, Spain is not a country that leaves you. Hemingway's Spain is not the tourist Spain of the coasts and beaches, but of the interior. In this heartland he encountered, and reinvented in literature, a tragic Spain of impassioned living and violent dying, a nation of Goyas and Garcia Lorcas that seemed cast to his own virile, existentialist morality. The epicenter of this universe, to which I returned this summer, is Pamplona and the surrounding hills of Navarre during the festival of San Fermin.

I had been to the legendary sanfermines once before, in 1977, when Spain was in the midst of its momentous transition to democracy. It was an amusing but tense festival because the emergent partisans of Basque nationalism were constantly clashing in Pamplona's streets with the police. Showing the red, white and green ikurrania, the Basque flag, could get one clobbered on the head by the cops; it was certainly as dangerous as running with the bulls. All that has changed. Next to the Irona Bar on the Plaza del Castillo, where Jake Barnes and his friends besotted themselves, the ikurrunia hangs harmlessly on the headquarters of the Basque Nationalist Party. A kind of political normalcy reigns.

A bust of Hemingway was put up by the town fathers of Pamplona in 1968 next to the Plaza de Toros on a small pedestrian way that bears the American's name; the brave and the foolbardy who make the three-minute morning sprint in front of the bulls dash past it as they spill into the ring, if they have not already stumbled in a human traffic pileup or been gored.

Ernesto, as many Spaniards call him, both out of fondness and an inability to pronounce his surname, came to regret in some measure the success with which he had spread the raucous sanfermines. In "The Dangerous Summer," describing his 1959 bullfight tour across Spain, Hemingway de-nounces the intrusion of the modern world on his beloved fiesta: "Tve written Pamplona once and for keeps. It is all there as it always was except forty thousand tourists have been added."

OR a while, many natives concurred. "There is a debate over whether or not Hemingway was positive for the identity of the sanfermines," said Julian Balduz, the city's mayor. "What happened is that Hemingway put the sanfermines at the disposition of the whole world, and the whole world doesn't fit into Pamplona." Yet the number of foreign tourists has dropped off in recent years; the eight days of merrymaking and bullfights are dominated by native Spaniards in their uniforms of white pants, white shirts, red sashes and red scarves and rope-soled shoes. (This time I decked myself out in this gear and, to my surprise, felt quite at ease. The wine helped, too.)

A hard core of perhaps 200 Americans and Englishmen returns annually to Pamplona. One of their leaders is Matt Carney, a model from Paris who achieved momentary notoriety by insulting Hemingway during his 1959 manifestation in Pamplona; another is Jeff Garth, a TWA steward, who was gored this season. American college students, with their well-thumbed paperback copies of "The Sun Also Rises," seem to check in for the opening days, then drift south to the Costa del Sol or east to the Costa Brava. But even these seem to be thinning out.

There are fewer groupies and fringe people," said Allen Josephs, a professor from the University of West Florida who is writing a book on Hemingway and Spain. "Some people have complained that Hemingway ruined Pamplona and the sanfermines. That's nonsense. It's still an entirely Basque festival and a Spanish festival." Carlos Bar-rena, an eminent builfight critic from Bilbao who has been going to the sanfermines for 27 years, concurs: "It is more comfortable for us now than it was during the Hemingway

The festival has two ingredients; wine and bulls. The Basques are good drinkers, which is a mercy in such an alcoholic event. Women seem to move around without much danto be the gardens behind the cathedral. Hemingway's poignant late-in-life footsteps is Marceliano's down behind the ayunta miento, or city hall, "where we went in the morning to eat and drink and sing after the encierro; Marceliano's where the wood of the tables and the stairs is as clean as the teak decks of a yacht except that the tables are honorably wine-spilled. The wine was as good as when you were twenty-one, and the food as marvelous as always." I had a blue trout and a green salad and talked to three gnarled men from San Sebastian about the

In Spanish, you don't go to a builfight, you go to the bulls, a los torox. The expression hints at the centrality of this myst animal. As Hemingway found, Spaniards are perplexed to come across an American who interested in the bulls, or who knows a little bit about them: It is as if the American has crashed some secret society.

The toreros, or bullfighters, go to Pamplona because it has the second biggest plaza de toros after Madrid, which means they get paid well. But they don't like the unserious. drunken spectators who prance and cavort on the low-price, sunny side - raining cushions and hunks of bread down onto the picador when displeased — and they don't like the big bulls that traditionally come to

The literature on bullfighting often seems nothing but a series of laments for a golden age that, when it existed, was being lamented for not being as good as the one before it. Hemingway falls a bit into this mode in "The Dangerous Summer." It is satisfying to be able to report that in Spain today a consensus among alicionados is building that both bulls and toreros are rising out of the deca-dence to which they had been condemned. The corrida has been embraced anew by many who at the time of Franco's death in 1975 spurned it as a legacy of a dark, retrograde, anti-European Spain; the same is true of flamenco. Having become a stable European democracy, Spain may now have redis-covered the pleasures of being itself.

In "The Sun Also Rises" the beautiful foothills of the Pyrenees are - with the quasi-religious experience of the bullfight the moral counterpoint to the debauchery of Jake's lost-generation friends. So it is necessary, and uplifting, to leave wine-soaked Pamplona for a one-hour drive to the village of Burguete, which sits at 2,982 feet (910 meters), and to the Irati River, where Jake and Bill do some heavy male bonding and

In his fiction, Hemingway is not always a reliable guide to geography and place, which he shunts about for higher literary purposes. He makes us believe, for example, that one can see the monastery of Roncesvalles from Burguete; it is not possible to do so, but the linkage heightens the religious overtones of Jake and Bill's quest.

Even Allen Josephs, with all his research. has not been able to figure out exactly where Jake, or Hemingway, fished the Irati, a pretty, shallow, swift-moving river that winds through green hills where you can walk for hours without seeing another human being. On his return to the foothills in 1959, Hemingway found them as unspoiled as they are now, and drove "further up that lovely trout stream into the great virgin forest of the Irati that was unchanged since the time of the

He declined to give details of his move-ments or his secret trout spot, "because we want to go back there again and not find fifty cars or jeeps have found it." He never made it back.

At the Bar Zubiondo, which is next to a rickety bridge over the Irati in the hamlet of Arive, I made some inquiries about the famous American writer, but the proprietor, pumping a cafe solo, confessed: "The Irati is very long, so I don't know where it would have been." She had only dimly heard of Henningway: The Irati had triumphed even

Somewhere above Arive, I plunged into the underbrush and had a picnic of bread, rosado wine, plums, pears and peaches on a little stone beach by the river. I didn't catch any trout, or even try, but I think I saw one

State-of-the-Art Travel: Paying Attention to Detail

by Roger Collis

NE of the world's leading strategic planners, Dr. Michael Kami, is fond of saying that the essence of successful corporate planning is to expect the unexpected." The same applies to business travel. The most carefully crafted itinerary can come irrevocably unglined if you're kept waiting for three days for an official meeting in Africa or the Middle East. Snow can strike in Marseille, leading to a cascade of broken appointments. (Would you believe Lisbon airport being closed for 36 hours because of high winds?) Or maybe the restaurant where you'd planned to host a power lunch is closed that one crucial day. State-of-the-art travel means checking out the options not only before you go, but What if?' scenarios once you're on the road. The savvy traveler minimizes bassle sad expense by having alternative reserva-tions, avoiding back-to-back meetings on a failth destination trip and allowing a day or two as a buffer for rest or rescheduling, especially before vital appointments in a new time tone as well as boning up on local lone time there were serviced for the service of the service lore. It's thorough preparation, staying flexi-ble and paying attention to detail that count.

Here's the second part of a checklist (the first part ran last week) to guide you through the jungle of options. It is by no means exhaustive, but it may help you to refine your own business-travel strategy.

• Keep trips short and travel light. Some pundits believe that two weeks is long enough for any trip; when you're away a third week, your efficiency falls off (especial-ly when crossing several time zones — you feel jet lag more flying east, but going west you're tempted to wear yourself out by ex-tending your working day) and schedule-changing can be a logistical nightmare. Restrict yourself to carry-on luggage whenever possible. You shouldn't need more than two suits, a jacket that serves as a blazer, half a dozen shirts and maybe a spare pair of shoes. Most women executives can travel just as light. Dramatic jewelry and a selection of blouses and sweaters means you can dress the same skirt up or down for nearly allbusiness occasions.

of such;

Carry-on luggage is becoming a contennous issue but there are no hard rules. You can get away on most airlines with two pieces measuring up to 22x19x6 inches (about 56x48x15 centimeters). If you do have to check baggage, never consign vital papers to the risk of loss or misrouting. Remember that excess baggage rates are outrageous — each excess kilogram (2.2 pounds) costs I percent of the first-class fare. A solution at Heathrow and Gatwick is the London Baggage Company, which can save you up to 75 percent. Charges include collection within central London and delivery at the destination airport.

 Consider the Schiphol connection. If you're flying long haul from a European city you can usually save money by buying a one-way ticket to Amsterdam (or an APEX/PEX or a British Caledonian "Time Flyer" fare) and then a return ticket from there which you can use to return direct to your home airport. Unlike fares from most cities, those from the Netherlands (on KLM and other airlines) are fully flexible, allowing unlimited stopovers, rerouting and change of carrier. The best bargains are in first and business class on routes to North America and the Far East. Flying from Amsterdam to Sydney can be $800 less than from London. From Amsterdam to New York costs little more in first class than the business-class fare from London. (First-class fares are normally twice those in business class.) In Amsterdam you ean buy a round-trip Air France Concorde ticket to New York (via Paris) for almost half the price charged by British Airways in London. An added bonus at Schiphol is the abundance of connections, the famous dutyfree shops and an average connecting time of

• Watch for the Brussels connection. A British-Belgian air traffic agreement signed on Oct. 10 is the most liberal yet established within Europe. It opens the way to radical experiments in fares and services between the two countries. British and Belgian airlines will be free to operate whatever services and fares and at whatever frequency they wish, subject only to disapproval by both governments. British Caledonian has already announced a winter round-trip "Time Flyer" fare of £55 ($81) starting in December, between Gatwick and Brussels. This compares with the normal economy fare of £162. It is available only on off-peak flights, but it has none of the Saturday night stay and advance booking restrictions of APEX. A seminal feature of the agreement is that other European countries.

Round-the-world fares. If you are traveling around the world in either direction consider a RTW ticket, which can save you up to 40 percent on the full economy or even business-class fare. Starting in Furnos a siness-class fare. Starting in Europe, a airlines can combine services to more than one point in either country and to points in

Fallback plans are necessary sooner or later typical routing might take you to the Middle East and on to the Far East. You could then go on to North America via the North or South Pacific. There are dozens of prices and options for RTW as well as restrictions regarding advance booking and number of stopovers, but it's well worth checking with your travel agent.

 Clubs and lounges. Use of an executive lounge comes with a business-class ticket when you fly some airlines (such as SAS, with 18 lounges around the world), with others, such as British Airways, you have to pay a membership fee. The International Airline Presences Association has largered Airline Passengers Association has lounges at Schiphol, Tegel (Berlin) and Finmicino (Rome). The Heathrow Business Centre (Terminal 2) provides a fully equipped office and staff for basic dues of £50 a year.

• The duty free bazaar. This is a bargain or a rip-off depending on where you shop and what you buy. The best values are in shops that are tax free as well as duty free. A shop with limited space tends to carry only top of the line items. Best buys are usually items local to a country. For variety, Hong Kong, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore are hard to beat. A recent innovation is the arrival shop where you can buy goods entering a country. In Europe, Schiphol has the best reputation for variety and prices, but the new duty free shop at Gatwick is worth a look. Last July, prices at Copenhagen's Kastrup Airport were cut on some items to compete more effectively with Schiphol. Car rentals. A spot check at Heathrow revealed that to rent a car at the airport costs 50 percent more than for the same vehicle at a downtown location. Some firms, for exam ple Swan National at Heathrow (associated with Interrent) offer cars at advantageous prices from airports at off-airport rates. Many rental companies, especially the majors, are providing a "business service," in-cluding phones in the higher priced cars and discounts at some hotels. Car rental is so competitive that you should be able to negotiate a discount of at least 20 to 30 percent.

Food, History and an Art Deco Revival

ARIS — Overnight, the word went out. "Manger au Boeuf" became the slogan of the hour and from the moment the newly reconstructed Boenf sur le Toit opened its doors in late October, this huge and historic Art Deco brasserie has been home to 500 to 700 diners daily.

Even more remarkable, Jean-Paul Bucher currently turns down 500 reservations daily, and the popularity means that reservations must be made at least three days in advance. In Paris? In a city with such an astonishing wealth of grand old brasseries? Even Bucher - the director of the enormously successful group of restored brasseries that comprises Flo, Julien, Vaudeville and Terminus Nord - is sort of twittering with relieved contentment over the success of this monument to Art Deco architecture and the lifestyle it Clearly, Bucher is a man in touch with the times. For the taste of the Parisian of the 1980s is not all that different from the Parisian of the 1920s, when Le Boeuf sur le Toit (named after the American jazz bar in the 1920 ballet of the same name by Jean Coctean and Darius Milhaud) was home to Picasso, Coco Chanel, Maurice Chevalier and the pianist Jean Wiener.

Now, as then, people go out looking for a good time, not simply gastronomic revela-tion. They want to eat well, yes, but the surroundings, the ambience, the total experience are what count in the end.

Bucher says it himself - he is selling a bit of history. And he is in the right market. Who in Paris does not want to feel, emotionally at least, part of those magic Art Deco days, when the creative class gathered at night near the piano to celebrate in public into the wee hours?

At the new Boeuf, all is as it should be. From the moment you approach the en-trance on Rue du Colisée you know exactly what to expect. There will be no surprises and there will be a fête. Mountains of shellfish — oysters, sea urchins, clams and mus-sels — sparkle with gemlike clarity on glistening beds of crushed ice. Inside, the sheer volume and presence of the space is instantly exciting, visually overwhelming. You feel, for certain, you're in the right place.

HE piano bar, peach-toned walls, posters, potted ferns and massive Art Deco chandeliers set the tone, as do the hip and happy looking diners, sharing those plateaux de fruits de mer and sampling classic brasserie fare, such as salade frisée; herring and warm sliced potatoes in a tangy vinaigrette; cassoulet, and roast leg of lamb with tender green flageoles beans.

The food and the service are really about as good as a diner can expect from a space this large and at a price this affordable. At Bocuf sur le Toit, a 200-franc note easily takes care of the bill.

Bucher's secret is really a combination of American-inspired business sense and traditional French respect for gastronomy. His brasseries and charcuteries share a central kitchen that handles desserts and some of the other common food preparation. But high standards for fresh ingredients and a well-trained staff keep his restaurants from becoming mundane food factories.

And though this is the first Bucher restaurant that is a total architectural recreation, not a simple renovation, it hasn't seemed to bother diners in the least.

He could, he knows, export the theme to the United States tomorrow, but without service personnel and a guaranteed full house at lunch, the Bucher formula would soon lose its magic.

Still, like many Frenchmen, Bucher dreams of America. But for now, he is content knowing that the Parisian appetite for the solid, medium-priced brasserie that tosses in a touch of nostalgia is far from

Clowning Around With Serious Eating

by Katherine Knorr

ARIS - We all know that France is the land where food is not only delicious but beautiful, with much care lavished on composing an attractive plat, on decorating patés and cakes. But the latest book from a group of France's vilder carroonists shows that France is also the land where food is, well, weird.
The latest offering from HA! (for Humorstes Associes), "La Table," is for anyone who takes food seriously, or rather not seriously at all.

ously at all.

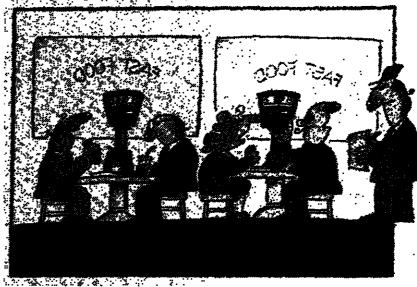

In the eyes of this motley crew, food is all sorts of things: surrealistic, frightening, grotesque, erotic. It's not particularly appetizing, and it's not for children.

Diners indulge while a dozen frogs roll around in wheelchairs — yes, they lost their

egs. Giant mice on some other planet rush up with forks to eat the cosmonaut caught in a giant mousetrap. A huge and confused scene with dozens of cooks in a restaurant kitchen is interrupted by a delivery boy bringing their lunch: takeout hamburgers. A man opens a can labeled Russian sardines only to find each time a slightly smaller can to open — like Russian dolls.

"La Table" is an obvious companion to an earlier book, "Le Vin." One of the favorite themes of the cartoonists there was, not surprisingly, corks and the devices used to pry them out of bottles. Corkscrews some-how get stuck upside down in bottles like ships in bottles. A contraption modeled on the Swiss Army knife is a seven-pronged corkscrew with a French flag. A pirate missing a hand has not a book but — yes, a corkscrew. There is, of course, a drunk Mona Lisa, and a highly decorated military man whose honors are French wines. And the inevitable French cops with the inevitable breath analysis tests — but with some rather unexpected results.

The HA! cartoonists contribute to a number of France's magazines and newspapers — from the staid France-Soir magazine and Le Monde to the raunchy-but-hilarious Hara Kiri — as well as to such publications as Playboy and Penthouse. They also publish their own books of cartoon strips and illustrate other books. They formed the group HA! in 1980 with the intention of producing a book every year. In between "Le Vin" — which had a German and a Dutch edition — and "La Table," came "Le Ski" and "Les 7 Péchés Capitaux."

tion. It would always turn, inevitably, on this accusation that there was something wrong particular, New York stirs little sentimentaland it had to do with me."

Yet Shepard is more elegiac than angry when he talks about his father's death. "It hasn't really clarified anything," he said.
"Nothing's clearer to me. You spend a lot of time trying to piece these things together and it still doesn't make any sense. His death brought this whole thing to a head, this yearning for some kind of a resolution which could never be. But at the same time, it was well worth the journey, trying to make some kind of effort to re-establish things."

· Death and time also have given Shepard some perspective, as a person and as a writer,

"When you're younger, that rage is completely misunderstood," he said. "It seems personal when you're a kid. This rage has to do with you somehow. Then as you get older you see that it had nothing whatsoever to do with you. It had to do with a condition this man had to carry because of the circumstances of his life, those being World War II. the Depression, the poverty of the Midwest farm family. And all these things contributed to this kind of malaise. Then it becomes much more interesting, when you have some distance on it, because then you can see here was a man who happened to be my father and yet he was more than just that'

One consequence of the turbulent Rogers household, and of Rogers's death, was that it made his children hunger for family. "I think it gave us a concrete perspective of what we had as a family, that it wouldn't be around forever," Roxanne Rogers said. "We've always been spread around and kind of carefree in our relations. What happened is we decided to try to put this family back togeth-

Rogers is working as assistant director of A Lie of the Mind." The other daughter in the family, Sandy, wrote and performed eight songs for the "Fool for Love" soundtrack. Shepard and his companion, the actress Jessica Lange, live in Santa Fe and are expecting a child soon. Before that he headed an extended family on a northern California ranch with his first wife, O-Lan Johnson.

"Sam's always needed a family," Roxanne Rogers said. "He's always needed a base, even though it hasn't always taken the most traditional form." "A Lie of the Mind" has brought Shepard back to New York, his first home away from his family and the scene of his early triumphs. Here he formed part of a downtown theatrical community that included the playwright Lanford Wilson and the producer Ellen Stewart. But for a man who disdains

ity. He likened the city to "a kennel" and, asked how he coped with the congestion said, "I got a .38. That's my escape hatch." As for his memories of the downtown days, Shepard said: "For the most part, it was a kind of survival act. I wouldn't go through it again if I had a choice. When I came here I was 18 and I didn't know anything about New York. I had no idea what it was like except it was some kind of cultural center. At the time I didn't realize I was a kid. I thought — well. I don't know what I thought. And now, looking back, I see I was pretty much of a kid, running around in an vercoat. But there is a mixture of feelings. There's a sense of this is where it all started. where I started writing, in this town. So there's a nostalgia. But I don't miss the city,

More than 20 years after he first arrived in New York. Shepard also faces vastly different expectations. No longer is he just another aspiring writer, holed up in the East Village; no longer is he even the Off Off Broadway hero whose name meant little up-town and even less west of the Hudson. Now he is a movie star, gossip column fodder, and arguably the finest American playwright of his generation.

The surroundings have changed more than the man. Shepard sits for an interview wearing cowboy boots, jeans, a flannel shirt and a thermal vest. His conversation grows most animated not on the subject of writing but of music. He speaks knowingly of Lightnin' Hopkins and Roscoe Holcombe, two favorites; he is up to date on "Don't Mess. With My Toot-toot," the surprise hit from Cajun country. And it sounds genuine when he professes not to feel the pressure to top, or at least equal, himself.

"I don't think it's possible to second-guess the reaction to your work," he said. "You just can't get involved in it. If you do get involved in it, then you try to predetermine things or calculate things. And I don't think you can work that way. It just doesn't seem possible. My work has always come out almost like a miracle, some kind of strange accident. You stumble into a certain territory that starts to excite you in a way that's got to be manifested. It comes out as a play or a character. But that kind of work cannot be formulated by 'My next project is this' or They're expecting me to do this. Then it gets shot to hell, because then it becomes a career. I'm not interested in a career. I don't want to have a career. I want to do the work that fascinates me."

London's Dickensian Holiday Season

by Jo Thomas

ONDON - If there is a time when a visitor can sense Jolly Old England in his sprawling capital, part ancient and part still growing up, it's in December and January, when the nights are long and florists put pots of violets in their shop windows and the holiday lights have been strung since early November.

The English celebrate the holidays with Dickensian zest and amazing staying power: Christmas trees in homes are decorated by the second week in December and stay up until Twelfth Night (Jan. 6), long after the last of the chocolates with which they are laden have been unwrapped and eaten. Bear in mind, though, that museums and mos restaurants close Dec. 24 to 26 and on Jan. 1 and theaters take a break on Christmas.

The Norwegian ambassador, Rolf T. Busch, switches on the lights of the gigantic Christmas tree on Trafalgar Suare on Dec. 12, and carols are sung around it from 4 to 9 each night until Christmas Eve. The lights stay on until Jan. 6.

The return of Halley's Comet has prompted exhibitions at two popular London at-tractions, the British Museum and the London Planetarium. The British Museum displays the recently discovered Babylonian observations of the comet's visits in the years 164 and 87 B.C., as well as other sightings made before Edmund Halley predicted it would return in 1758. The Planetarium, noting that the real comet will be small and faint compared to past visits, is showing it close up in perfect skies in its "Once in a Lifetime" show every 40 minutes from 12:15 to 4:20 P.M. and from 11 A.M. on weekends and holidays. It will be closed on Christmas but resumes Dec. 26. Admission is the equivalent

The British Museum also has, until Jan. 5, the most comprehesive exhibition on Buddhism ever staged in Britain, including early manuscripts, sculpture and painting (Daily, 10 to 5; Sunday, 2:30 to 6; free.) At the Barbican Center, a festival of traditional Japanese culture is under way through Jan. 26. The exhibit, "Toki — Tradition in Japan Today," centers around the paintings of 50 of Japan's leading Nihonga artists, who use traditional Japanese techniques while re-flecting Western influences. A traditional Japanese garden and tea house will also be displayed, along with jewelry and other exhibitions. From Jan. 13 it will also include a retrospective of the Japanese film director Akira Kurosawa. (Daily, 10 to 7:15; Sunday, noon to 7:15; admission free, except for Nihonga exhibit, which is $2.80, and the films, from $2.)

"German Art in the 20th Century", is at the Royal Academy until Dec. 22 (admission: $4.50). From Jan. 16 through March 31, the Academy will present the first major exhibition on World War I, including the engine from the Fokker triplane that Baron Manfred von Richthofen was flying when he was shot down, and a ventriloquist's dummy used to amuse troops in the trenches. (Daily, 10 to 5:50; Sunday, 2 to 5:50; suggested donation: $1.40.)

LSO under the museum's jurisdiction are the Cabinet War Rooms, the un-L derground emergency offices of Winston Churchill, his cabinet and chiefs of staff, in the Government Offices on Great George Street. To find the entrance, go to the Clive Steps on King Charles Street. (Tuesday through Saturday from 10 to 5:50; $2.80.)

The Victoria and Albert Museum has three exhibits focusing on fashion: a collection of photographs chosen by David Bailey, the fashion photographer, until Jan. 19; hats from India, until Jan. 26; and historic and contemporary knitting. (Daily, 10 to 5:50; Sundays, 2:30 to 5:50; closed Friday; dona-

Concerts include Yehudi Menuhin at the Barbican Center on Dec. 26 at a Beethoven evening conducted by Norman Del Mar ($7 to $17.50). The London Festival Ballet opens "The Nutcracker" Dec. 26 at Royal Festival Hall, and it will run through Jan. 15. ($5 to $17.50). Peter Wright's production of this magical story will be performed by the Royal Ballet at Covent Garden from Dec. 14 to Jan. 8 ($6 to $30). Wright also has a new production of "Giselle" at Covent Garden, running until Jan. 17. His "Coppelia" will be at Sadler's Wells from Jan. 3.

The English National Opera has a new production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," directed by Jonathan Miller, at the Coliseum until mid-January ($5.50 to $24.50). To mark the Handel tercentenary, the company is also presenting his "Julius Caesar" from Dec. 16 to Jan. 15 ($5.60 to $24.50). At Covent Garden, the Royal Opera, with Placido Domingo, will begin Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra" on Jan. 14 ($10 to $52).

Two delightful Covent Garden restaurants with French cuisine are within easy reach of both the theater district and some of the best shopping this season. Inigo Jones, 14 Garrick Street (836-6456), offers nouvelle cuisine in a former stained-glass factory. The service manages to be both friendly and unobtrusive. While prices for dinner are from $24.50 a person, a three-course lunch or pre-theater dinner are available for $21. Among the offerings are a salad of thinly sliced eggplant and zucchini with mint vogurt, a ragout of hare with red wine, prunes and vegetables, and a fresh sorbet for des-sert. (Closed Sundays and Dec. 24 to Jan. 1.) At Thomas de Quincey's, 36 Tavistock Street (240-3972), the menu at lunch includes a red pepper mousse with avocados and a main course of filet of pork thinly sliced and shallow fried with slices of pears served in layers of puff pastry and a wild mushroom sauce. A recent lunch for two, with drinks and wine, cost $86. (Closed Sundays and

Dec. 22 to Jan. 1; opens for dinner Jan. 2.) Salloos. 62 Kinnerton Street, in Belgravia (235-4444), serves delicious Pakistani cuisine in an intimate setting. Abdul Aziz, the curry chef, and Noor Mohammad, the tandoori chef, provide dinner for two with wine for $66. (Closed Sundays and Dec. 24 to 26 and

A tracking unit, made by Lo-Jack's subsidiary, Micrologic Inc., is mounted in the police car. Mr. Duvall said tests in the past year have located most vehicles within 10 minutes.

T PRESENT, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, only half of the cars stolen in the United States are ever found. In 1984, more than a million cars were stolen, and the annual cost has been put at $5 billion. In Massachusetts, which has the worst auto-thelt record of any state, one of every 87

"Our first move is to get the State of Massachusetts up and running with the system," Mr. Duvall said. "Then, using this state as a model, we'll spread out through New England, into Connecticut and New York, and then the West Coast and Texas."

Automakers and the insurance industry have expressed interest in the new device, Mr. Duvall said, but he added that it would not become a factory option until the system was in place in the eight problem areas. The company has been talking to the insurance commissioner of Massachusetts, he said, and it is hoped that rates will drop.

British Designer Fashioning a Larger Habitat

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service. LONDON - Sir Terence Conran, one of

Britam's great entrepreneurial success sto-ries, is about to enlarge his retail and design empire, and the question now is whether he can continue to work his magic.
Sir Terence's company, Habitat Mother-care PLC, which owns more than 750 stores, including the Conran's home furnishings chain in the United States, announced Nov.

25 that it was merging with British Home Stores PLC, a department store and food retailer. The transaction is worth $2.12 bil-Although the merger is a combination of approximate equals and the board will be divided evenly between the managements of the two concerns, Sir Terence will be chair-for British Home Stores," said Paul Deacon, a senior analyst for Wood Mackenzie & Co. In his London office one evening last week, Sir Terence compared BHS to Mothercare, a retail chain selling merchandise for young mothers, babies and children, which he acquired three years ago. It was, he recalled, a colid well are company where products and solid, well-run company whose products and stores lacked pizzazz. "BHS is something of the same thing," Sir Terence said. "It is a very good, very decent, very straightforward company, but its prod-ucts are dull. There is a great deal of opportu-nity to bring style and design to BHS."

Sir Terence, who was knighted two years ago for his contributions to British design and retailing, would seem to be the right man for the job. Trained as a textile and furniture designer, he began his retailing career in 1964 with Habitat, a cash-and-carry home furnishings store in London geared to young people.

The goods were modern, trendy and af-fordable. He began just as the postwar baby boom generation was striking out on its own, setting up households and eager for the kinds of products Sir Terence was offering. The concept blossomed and, today, there are 103 Habitat-style stores in Europe, the United States and Japan.

Sir Terence has also diversified and expanded his retailing network through acquisitions. The Mothercare merger in 1982 was followed a year later by the purchase of Heal & Son, an established producer of top-quality furniture best known for its beds. The Prince and Princess of Wales, for instance, sleep on a Heal's bed. Also in 1983, Sir Terence joined with Morgan Grenfell & Co., the merchant bank, to buy Richards Shops, a British chain of 211 women's clothing stores.

With British Homes Stores added to Habitat Mothercare, Sir Terence will be overseeing an operation with 880 stores, 35,000 employees and yearly revenues of more than $1.5 billion.

Both as a retailer and an author of books on home design, the 54-year-old executive has become a tastemaker to millions. For a wealthy corporate executive, however, his educational background is ordinary.

officials said Thursday.
The EC Council of Ministers was to notify Washington late Thursday that the last obstacle to the arrangement had been overcome, with formal ratification scheduled for next Tuesday.

Britain had threatened to veto the four-year agreement covering most steel sales to the U.S. because of dissatisfaction over Washington's plans to curb shipments of semifinished steels, which are not covered by the pact.

Britain's state-owned steelmaker, British Steel Corp., ships steel ingots to a U.S. subsidiary for processing into finished products. The finished products are then sold in the American market.

The U.S. has already shown its discontent at the delay in ratifying the Nov. 1 accord by holding up customs clearance of all EC steel entering the country.

The officials said it was not immediately clear what assurances British Steel might have obtained in direct talks with U.S. trade officials about scheduled shipments to its U.S. subsidiary for distribution in the United States.

But U.K. officials said British Steel was satisfied with the outcome of last-minute talks with the Americans aimed at safeguarding future supplies of semifinished steel to its U.S. subsidiary, Tuscaloosa Steel Co.

"We do not have final details about the discussions, but we know British Steel is satisfied with the outcome," one British official said.

Britain had sought extra tonnages for the Tuscaloosa unit and wanted assurances about access to the U.S. market for semifinished

The slowdown was a U.S. administrative counter-measure introduced to protest at delays in signing the new trade pact, needed to replace a 1982 agreement expir-ing at the end of this month.

In Washington, meanwhile, the pore are suggesting that brokerage houses were running up hundreds of millions of dollars in debts at a special U.S. Trade Representative, Clayton L. United Press International

NEW YORK — The New York Stock Exchange tested the 1,500 level Thursday but finished mixed in the fourth heaviest trading session in history. On the Big Board, 181,01 million shares changed hands in the most active session since Oct. 19, 1984.

The Dow Jones industrial average broke through the 1,500 level in an early afternoon surge, crossing a centennial mark for the second time in a month. The Dow passed the 1,400 level on Nov. 6.

However, late selling caused the Dow to close with a modest loss of 1,49, to 1,482,91, down from its record, set Wednesday, of 1,484,40.

Analysts said a tug-of-war between computand profit-taking putting it back, characterized the session.

Other indicators also fell. The NYSE composite index eased 0.13 to 117.57. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 0.35 to 203.88 and the price of an average share declined 4 cents. The lead of advancing issues over decliners was wide at midday, but narrowed late in the session. Advances finally outpaced declining issues 867-787 among the 2,056 issues traded. After the market closed, the Federal Reserve reported that the nation's basic money supply rose $4.4 billion in the week ended Nov. 25. Edward Nicoski of the Minneapolis-based firm of Piper Jaffray & Hopwood said a Dow close above 1,500 would not have the major significance that it might once have enjoyed. Brazil to Repay 25% Of Failed Banks' Debt BRASILIA - Brazil has annonneed that it would reimburse ity for all of the losses suffered by round 25 percent of the losses sufered by foreign banks when three mivate Brazilian banks failed Nov. 19. The payment will come to about $100 million.

The National Economic Council made the decision Wednesday, two weeks after the central bank closed the large Comind and Auxiliarbanks and the smaller Maisonnave bank.

The decision calls for approximately $100 million in monetary reserves to be drawn to reimburse international creditors who lent an estimated $415 million to the three banks. Together, the three had uncovered loans of $764 million. Local creditors also will be rem bursed for 25 percent of their losses, the council said. Payments to all creditors will begin Dec. 16. Financial sources said about 150 U.S. banks and some Japanese and European lenders had faced losses on what are known as "Resolution .'53" loans.

These are sums lent by interna-tional creditors to Brazilian banks, which then re-lend the money locally. The loans do not carry a sovernment guarantee but the added risk normally is compensated by higher interest rates. Initially, Finance Minister Dil-

Mr. Funaro said the foreign banks had made the loans "with higher spreads" than on a less risky government-guaranteed loan, "but now they want the government to carry the responsibility."

But officials were said to be worned that creditors — particularly smaller U.S. regional banks would withdraw their support for Brazil's negotiations over its $103billion foreign debt if the government ignored the losses.

Brazil is trying to reschedule payment of about $46 billion in debt that falls due before the end of the decade. The negotiations with the banks have been stalled until Brazil reaches agreement with the International Monetary Fund on an economic recovery program to control the budget deficit and bring the country's 224-percent inflation

Henson Reports Pretax Profit Up 49.5% on Year

LONDON - Hanson Trust PLC reported Thursday that its pretax profit in the year ended Sept. 30 had risen 49.5 percent from the previous year, to £252.8 million ($375.4 million).

The group also announced a one-for-three bonus issue. Hanson's sales rose to £2.67 billion from £2.38 billion a year earlier, and its profit up from £169.1 million, was above many analysts expectations.

But shares of the group, whose £520-million rights issue earlier this year attracted limited stockholder support, showed little change. Hanson shares traded Thursday at 209 pence each on the London Stock Exchange, up from 207 pence at Wednesday's close.

Gordon White, chairman of Hanson Industries Inc., said Hanson was looking at other opportunities in the United States while it awaited an appeals count's decision on its offer for SCM Corp.

Hanson is appealing last week's decision by a U.S. district court to allow an investor group led by Metrill Lynch & Co. to exercise an option to buy two SCM businesses.

Ferranti Reports Flat Profit, Better Margins, in First Half

LONDON - Ferranti PLC, a the division's market and increased British electronics maker and military contractor, said Thursday that pretax profit in its first fiscal half nded Sept. 30 rose only fractionally from a year earlier, to £18.9 million (about $28 million at current rates) from £18.5 million. The company said that a strike at its Dundee factory in June cut profin the half by about £1 million. Ferranti was one of the few British electronics companies expected to show any increase in profits this year, but its first-half performance was below analysts' best expectations. The company's share price slipped Thursday on the London

Stock Exchange to 134 pence from 138 pence at Wednesday's close. Ferranti said its margins, apart from those on semiconductor production, have improved and its orhe European Tornado fighter air- der book is at a record level. U.K., Japan Seek Phone Business in Third World

LONDON — The national telephone companies of Britain and Japan are starting campaigns to sell their expertise in the Third World.

For Nippon Telegraph & Tele-phone Corp. and British Telecommunications PLC, operating their respective domestic telephone networks will remain the dominant business. But both see opportunities to create a useful sideline through overseas service units.

The hame countre is designed by Christian Lacroix, at 34 the same age as de Mouy, whose brother Guy, 32, head of the New York subsidiary, makes up the tripartite of this bright young team all in their 30s. Lacroix, called "a talent to watch" by The New York Times, designs the couture clothes, the hats, which play a promi part in his collections, and all accessories includng belts and shoes.

Patou's fabulous fragrance, Joy, "the costlest perfume in the world," was created by a Parou perfumer just as Jean Kerleo, the present house "nose" composes huxuriously extravagant formu-las like the one for "1000" in 1972, based on the Osmanthus flower of China which only blooms for several hours each spring, a scented opulence only Patou would date to produce.

QUALITY FIRMS

In the same spirit, Patou is bringing out a rare "Book of Perfumes," containing the 12 fragrances of Ma-Collection, the recently revived "parfums d'époque" launched be-tween 1925 and 1964. Available by special order, the three-volume work recounts the glittering history of the house and the stories of such evocative scents as Amour, Amour, Divine Folic and Normandie.

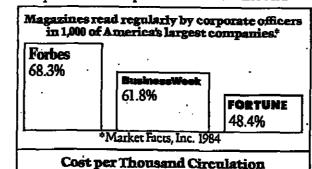

Exports account for 85 percent of perfume production, 2 25 percent increase, with major markets evenly split between the United States and the Far East followed by Europe and the Middle East. To better control distribution, Patou repurchased the New York firm in 1982 and have established others in London, Milan, Geneva and Hong Kong. Parou's dedication to what de Moüy calls "small is beautiful" is perfectly illustrated by their world renowned best-seller, Joy, whose rare natural ingredients mean production will always be exclusively limited. They will continue to concentrate on offering each client the same regal service in the things they do best: countre and fragrance. De Mouy's mission is to provide a climate where Patou designers can produce "the most exception-al things possible" which their loyal distinguished clientele has discovered are found nowhere else in the world. Like a rare Burgundy, Patou's designs will continue to be strictly limited and equally precious - 2 symbol of the peerless perfection of the best of the best.

Forbes. The most efficient way of reaching America's most influential executives.

A glance at the graph will tell you what a study by a leading independent researcher, Market Facts, Inc., told us: That Forbes is preferred reading by more corporate officers in 1,000 of America's largest service and industrial companies. In comparison with Fortune and Business Week, Forbes was judged to be overall favorite by 44%, versus 29% for Business Week and 19% for Fortune.

When regular readers were asked which of the three reflects best the excitement of business, Forbes had twice the scores of the other two. And when asked which of the three stands for "free enterprise," 71% named Forbes, compared with 13% for Fortune and 7% for Business Week.

These results confirm surveys done over the past fifteen years showing that more officers in big business read Forbes regularly than either Fortune or Business Week. As the graphs so eloquently show, Forbes is the most cost-effective business magazine for reaching America's most effective executives. If you want to reach this elite, not only is it good business for you to put your advertising in Forbes, it's bound to be good for your business.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

INVITATION TO PREQUALIFICATION

Contractors interested in being prequalified for the land preparation of the OUAKA SUGAR PROJECT estate, should obtain against payment of 50,000 F CFA to the President of the NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR OUAKA SUGAR PROJECT REALISATION the prequalification form and submit it at least for December 16, 1985, 1 p.m. local time.

The land preparation is financed by the SAUDI FUND FOR DEVELOPMENT.

The land preparation involves: bush clearing, vegetation burning, reavy subsoiling, land leveling on 1,300 ha, agricultural road network construction for about 100 km and small road civil-works. The prequalified constructors would participate in the final hidding. VATIONAL COMMISSION FOR THE OUAKA SUGAR PROJECT Avenue Prisident David Dacko.

SEC Chairman Proposes Electronic Certificates

BOCA RATON, Florida — The Securities and Exchange Commission chairman, John S.R. Shad, proposed Thursday that new issues of corporate and municipal bonds be made in the form of an electronic "global certificate" as a first step in saving money on engraving and delivery of securities certificates.

"It just has got to be incredibly better than shuffling all that paper," Mr. Shad said at a convention of the Securities Industry Association, a group of Wall Street securities traders. He said the securities industry spends vast sums on engraving, cutting, and delivering tons of securities certificates daily.

In addition, Mr. Shad said, millions of dollars in certificates are lost, stolen, mutilated and photographers in her introduction. The I.H.T. is pleased to present this unique volume that captures a decisive epoch and commemorates the work of some of the 20th century's master photojournalists.

Here you'll find some of the most famous images and faces of our time. Once you open its pages, you will want to spend hours poring over this magnificently produced collection. Truly this is a book to treasure for yourself, and a beautiful gift as well.

Was Sold in Bid To Lower Dollar

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The United States and 10 other industrial nations sold $10.2 billion on foreign exchange markets in the six weeks after a Sept. 22 agreement to reduce the value of the dollar, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

The Fed sold nearly $3.2 billion of the total to buy Deutsche marks and Japanese yen, making it the largest U.S. currency intervention

The intervention was outlined Wednesday in a report on foreign exchange operations by the Fed and the U.S. Treasury for the three months ended Oct. 31. The report said all the dollar sales by the New York Fed on behalf of the Treasury and the Fed system had occurred after the agreement by the United States, Japan. West Germany, Britain and France.

From the days before the agreement through the end of October, the value of the dollar fell 13 percent against the yen and 10.5 percent against the mark, the Fed re-

THE WINE-DARK SEA

By Leonardo Sciascia. Translated from the Italian by Avril Bardoni. 142 pages. $14.9 Carcanet Press, 108 E. 31st Street, New York, N. Y. 10016

As a novelist and essayist, Leonardo Scias-cia is the most authentic voice writing in Sicily today. He remains in Palermo, avoiding the literary mainstream in Milan and Rome, spinning stories that unfold so naturally they seem derived from felk tales. Some are; they can begin with a great-grandfather who ran through the streets of Palermo with Garibaldi's Thousand, and suddenly turn into a story on Mafia vengeance.

The better-known Italo Calvino, who died in September, also drew strength from old tales for his fabulist novels.

In "The Wine-Dark Sea," a collection of short stories, Sciascia works his native soil realistically, without Calvino's literary flour-ishes, but he also has a few tricks up his sleeve. Quite often there is a double-twist because Sciascia's characters are cunning: their enemy always seems to be some higher authority — a landowner, the clergy, the Mafia, a police chief, whoever happens to run the government Still, the author manages to find flowers in the island's cactus.

"The Wine-Dark Sea" is a good introduction the wine-Dark sea is a good introduction to Sciascia, anthor of such novels as "Equal Danger," "A Man's Blessings," "Salt in the Wound" and, most recently, "Candido." Although "The Wine-Dark Sea" appeared in Italy a dozen years ago with the same Homeric phrase in its title ("Il Mare Colore del Vmo"), it is now published in English for the first time with a fine translation by Avril Bardoni.

The 13 stories show Sciascia's range. Some are hilarious, such as "Apocryphal Correspondence re Crowley," in which Benito Mussolini corresponds with the chief of police of a small town in Sicily, ordering him to spy upon a British artist who is living with five young women in a villa and painting obscene frecoes. It becomes a statement on the dictator Another lighthearted story, "A Matter of Conscience, touches upon one of the favores themes of Italian writers: cuckoldry, Among Sicilian writers who have also played with to subject in this century are Luigi Pirandello and Elio Vittorini. In Sciascia's modern tale, thenis a feminist twist - the discovered young wife of the old lawyer ends up laughing at him.

In "Mafia Western," the author returns to a subject he has handled powerfully in his novels. Sciascia does not romanticize killers, a 10 fundamental fault of American novelists and filmmakers. In his story, revenge pulls the trigger and blows up an assassin's car; the author is not enchanted by the Mafia's code of honor. Sciascia has often been categorized as a detective story writer. He is not, Like Pirandel. lo he is a writer of metaphysical mysteries. rooted in human affairs.

FOXYBABY

HOW, wonders the heroine of "Foxybaby." has she gotten into such a ridiculous predicament? Here she is, Miss Alma Porch, novelist and lecturer, stuck in some godforsaken little town in Australia, trying to teach drama to a bunch of unhappy women, who are more intent on shedding a couple of pounds than thinking about art.

Can she really use them as a sounding board for her latest work of fiction? Can she inspire them to create something vaguely artistic themselves? Can she find, here, a respite from her own boring life at home?

Using this ludicrous situation as a spring-board, Elizabeth Jolley gets her third novel off to a fine, bouncy start.

Certainly, Jolley has a bright eye for the absurd — for the pretentious posturing of quote-mongering academics and for the impor-tunate inquiries of their philistine students. Indeed, Trinity College, as this glorified summer camp is called, turns out to be an awful place: students, like their tutors, are housed in cramped rooms, obliged to study with teachers barely capable of speaking English and subjected to classes in such matters as chicken-wire weaving.

They're starved on a diet of lettuce and lemon juice, forced to buy additional food on the local black market, and generally inconvenienced, embarrassed, and conned.

Needless to say, the prim Miss Porch is appalled by Trinity College and wishes she had sever agreed to come. A well-meaning spinster, she seems afflicted with an overwhelm consciousness, forever arranging her features into what she hopes are appropriate expressions of hope, interest, or sympathy, and trying to make soothing noises when she's at a loss for words. Her imagination likes to take quirky little turns. It also has a way of embroidering the lives of people she has just encountered, instantly turning them into fictional creations. When Mrs. Castle, for instance, starts dithering on about her poor darling daughter, her lovely son-in-law, and their four Siamese cats, Miss Porch conjures up, in her mind, a picture of the Castle home, in which the lonely old woman makes a pest of herself in her children's

The other characters Miss Porch meets Trinity tend to be as one-dimensional as Mrs. Castle.

The narrow, cartoon-like characterization leads to some very amusing, if broadly drawn, moments, but it creates problems when Jolley makes it clear that she does not merely want to write a straightforward satire, that she also wants to make a commentary on the coasequences of loneliness and isolation.

As she did in her last novel, "Miss Peabody's inheritance." Jolley tries to use the overall narrative structure to reflect and refract the relationships that exist between the author of a work of fiction, its characters and its audience. But this time, the three elements — that is, Alma Porch, her fictional creations and her students — seem too filmsy to support such a thesis, the geometry that develops between them, all too predictable and pat.

Walton's 'Old Days' End With New Team

Walton's rough-hewn features broke into a smile as he replied, Those days are over." And it was about that time Walton decided he was going to like the Boston Celtics even more than he had imagined.

"I love being here, I really love it," Walton said recently. [Walton was superb Wednesday night at East Rutherford, New Jer-sey, as the Celtics extended their vinning streak to nine games with a 130-111 victory over the Nets, The Los Angeles Times reported.

what he once had been. "Those days are over now," he said. Not just the ponytail, not just the beard, those trademarks of an athlete identified with protest, the last trace of the 1960's hippies in the age of the yuppies. The latest stage in Bill Walton's odyssey is the Celtics, the most famous and most admired team in basketball. The unselfish game he played for John Wooden at UCLA made it seem that his red hair and rustic jolly-green-giant looks have been jutting above Celtic uniform No. 5 forever.

"This reminds me of UCLA." he said. "Going on the road, every gym sold out, everyone trying to make their season by beating us, yet everybody appreciating us, a lot of fans on the road rooting for us. I love it. It's a lot of fun.'

He had fun recently against the New York Knicks, coming off the bench as a substitute for Robert Parish, playing 19 minutes, scoring 5 points with 11 rebounds, one below Parish, the game leader.

"Minutes?" Walton mused, "To me, it's more important to the athlete to win. I can't be out there for a long time anymore, physically. I suffer stress fractures when I do. This is a great team for me to come

Bird came into the league in 1979-80, when Walton was playing 14 abortive games for San Diego between stress fractures. Bird knew that Walton was controversial, but he did not know that Walton's '60s idealism had often found expression in an unselfish pass, a lastsecond blocked shot.

"I didn't know what kind of a guy he was," Bird admitted. "I didn't know what his morale was like. I found out he loves the game of baskethall."

The Celtics had been looking to move Cedric Maxwell because they did not feel he fought back hard enough from knee problems last season. They received a man who had already fought back, and was willing to play behind Parish. "Bill Walton means that Robert can stretch himself out for seven minutes or so, and know that Bill's behind him," said K. C. Jones, the team driver for Ferrari, he won everything from Le Celtics' smooth and eloquent coa-Mans to Venezuela, and in 1961 he became the first ch. "We've got two all-stars at cen-

As Socrates Would Say, It's a Whole New Ball Game preceded them, today's philosopher-coache

By David Holahan Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Vince Lombardi, George Halas and Knute Rockne were football coaches, period. They forged strategies and molded men. Despite ruling their teams with a Nietzschean "will to power," they were never thought of as anything but football Today they would be as obsolete as the flying wedge. In 1985, football coaches must be philosophers first and foremost. Just listen to the "color" analysts on the weekend's professional games and you will hear something like this:

"Well, John it's third and short; what's Coach Shula's philosophy in this situation?"
"The beauty of his thinking here, Pat, is that he studiously avoids the dialectic altogether. I suppose you could call him an existentialist; he's liable to do anything." As the play is called, John is proven correct.

Ironically, Lombardi himself, the archetypal coach, may have unconsciously sown the seeds of the modern philosopher-coach. Students of National Football League history describe his pithy "run for daylight" tenet as a thinly disguised Sartrian exposition of absolute freedom. On the other side of the argument, and the scrimmage line, Lombardi heralded the linebacker's total freedom to obliterate that daylight, ergo the ballcarrier.

The late mentor of the Green Bay Packers is also famous for his Nietzschean insistence on excellence and superhuman exertions by his players. (Some scholars insist he was not molding men, but supermen.) "Winning isn't everything," Lombardi averred, "It's the only thing." That philosophy, although it was not such in his time, has had a profound influence on 20th century NFL thought.

Modern football also has been influenced Kari Marx, who foresaw a century ago that in its advanced stages the sport would resort to specialization and an increasing di-vision of labor. No one plays "both ways" anymore. In fact, hardly anyone plays one way the entire game. There are "special teams" and "situation players" galore, like the third-down pass-catching halfback. There are run specialists and pass specialists on defense as well. Recently, many teams have adopted a two-place-kicker philosophy: one man for field goals and extra points and another for kicking off.

As football has grown exponentially more complex, schools of thought have proliferated. One trend can clearly be termed Orwellian: Big Coach (not the quarterback, as in days of yore) calls all the plays from the sideline. Only three of 28 NFL teams — and fewer and fewer college squads - grant their field generals the freedom to choose the offensive plays.

Unlike many of the great thinkers who embrace monotheism; conversely, atheism has no place in the locker room. Indeed, most have advanced this theory a bit by syllogizing thusly: If there is a God and if he cares about mankind, he must logically be an avid, activist fan of gridiron gyrations. Post-Super Bowl interviews with winning coaches are always sprinkled liberally with praise and credit to the Almighty, who seems to throw his support to a different team each year.

Like a team on a winning streak, philoso pley is gaining momentum in the NFL. During a recent preseason game one television commentator observed: "Will you look at the size of that left tackle! Well, that's been the Raider philosophy: huge linemen." Probably the next great intellectual up-heaval in pro football will be an attempt to somehow integrate and homogenize these numerous and diverse schools of thought. An anthology of Eric Hoffer-like aphorisms -"No pain, no gain," "Newspaper clippings don't make tackles" — also would be handy.

Perhaps someday soon we will see Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers or Tom Landry of the Dallas Cowboys rushing on to the field to argue an official's call -screaming, "C'est absurde!"

How Parents Go Bananas

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — The woman ahead of me in a supermarket checkout line wrote a check for three bananas. I was appalled.

"No wonder the country is going down the drain," I told the children that evening as they settled in front of the TV to watch "Miami Vice." I waited for one to ask me what I was talking about so I could reply, "Would you believe I saw a woman today write a check to pay for three

But of course none of them asked me what I was talking about. It made me furious. "Why don't you ask me what I'm talking about when I make a provocative remark about the country going down the drain?" I said.

They said they knew what I was talking about. I was talking about the disgusting condition character-ized by children settled in front of television sets watching cops wear

I sneered at their innocence, crying. "The arrogant innocence of children! How can you think that I, who spent the best Saturday afternoons of my life watching Buster Crabbe dashing about the planet Mongo in the fanciest-cut long johns ever seen on the silver screen

I had forgotten what I was say-

"Country going down the drain," murmured the oldest child as he rose to refresh his glass. "Exactly," I said. "In my day I had to give up Buster Crabbe on the planet Mongo before I could drink bourbon.

A remarkable onset of violence distracted their attention from my philosophical musings. When it subsided I put the question to them

Will you all promise your old dad here and now that you will never pay for three bananas by writing a check?"

They looked mildly curious. I urged them to listen because a check was too serious to be used for buying three bananas.

'Am I getting through? Do you know what I mean when I say unless we start showing some respect for money, the country's going down the drain?" 'I understand, dad," said the girl. She is highly intelligent, a college graduate. "You're saying we should always pay for our bananas with a credit card." Is it any wonder that President Reagan himself, the greatest balanced-budget man the United States has produced since who knows when - is it any wonder that he doubled the national debt in a single presidential term?

Some truly evil young people, but beautifully coiffed, were firing automatic weapons in faraway corrupt Miami on the TV screen.

People who write checks for three bananas at the supermarket are people too innocent to be scared when they ask a person if dinner at La Rive Coach is expensive and that person replies, Take your checkbook '

"That's 'Rive Gauche,' dad, not 'Rive Coach,' " said the girl with her college degree that, now that I thought of it, had been paid for with checks serious enough to buy an entire boatload of bananas and a banana-republic dictator.

The TV had passed from bloodletting into its marketing mode. Actors disguised as bankers seemed to be urging the children to borrow nmense sums of money to establish heavy industrial plants. The younger boy, who is interested in antiques, took the opportunity to ask why people used to get scared when, having asked whether dinner at La Rive Whichever was expensive, they were told, "Take your checkbook."

Because when money was still accorded a little respect in this country," I said, "people used their checkbooks only for the most serious purchases, like buying a car, a house, a trip to Europe -

"Miami Vice" resumed with screams, gunfire and contemporary music. A revoltingly evil man was buying a car, a house, a trip to Europe and paying with cash. Be-fore he took off for Europe, I knew, that man would go to the super-market, buy three bananas to help him survive the airline food and pay for them by writing a check. No wonder we're going down the dresses all in black. Today she is wearing a black coat, black slacks, black sweater over black blouse, and a black watchband. On stage, however, the Australian-born actress Zoe Caldwell, three times a Tony winner, goes from black and white to living color. At the Kennedy Center's Terrace Theater in Washington, through Dec. 14, she is bringing to life Lillian Hellman in "Lillian," a new one-woman show.

Written by William Luce who fashioned "The Belle of Amherst" out of the life and poetry of Emily Dickinson — and directed by Caldwell's husband, the producer Robert Whitehead, "Lillian" is based on the autobiographical writings of a woman who was as celebrated for her stormy relationship with the writshiell Hammett, and their refusal to bow before the House Committee on Un-American Activities and Senator Joseph Mc-Carthy, as she was for plays such as "The Little Foxes," "Watch on the Rhine" and "The Children's

"It really has been the most difficult thing I've ever done," said Caldwell, 52. "I had morning sickness every day of rehearsals. Ask Robert! There was something in me that just didn't want to give myself over to Lillian. The play is set in 1961 in the antercoom of a hospital, two hours before Dash dies, and the whole evening has to be supported by her emo-tional response to his dying. So it isn't a one-woman show where you go out and tell a lot of stories and jokes. To do it, I have to be totally inhabited by Lillian. I know that sounds like spooky stuff. But it really was most pain-

For months, she pored over Hellman's writings, scrutinized her on videotape, talked with anyone who had a firsthand anecdote or impression. She even took up cigarettes again, since "it seemed like Lillian always had smoke where around her." But for the longest time, she couldn't find what she calls "the clinker."

"It's what I have to find in order to play any part - the thing

But in Lillian's case, I couldn't find it.

"I kept saying to Robert, "Everyone talks about Lillian's femiminity.' And she was deeply feminine, despite this image people have of her as a tough, smoking lady. She was a flirtations Southern beile. She spent a lot of money on clothes. She always had her nails and her hair done. And yet there in the middle of her face was this nose — not just the nose she was born with, but this bashed-up nose. A woman who spends such an inordinate amount of money on her personal appearance in this day and age would have that nose tended to. But she never did. In all her photographs, it's like this great badge of courage she wears. That's the clinker!"

Caldwell clapped her hands tri-umphantly, then laid out the evidence that unlocked the puzzle. "I discovered that in puberty, Lil-

That helped me understand all the despair and disturbance she suffered, for example, in her sexual relationship with Dash, who had a lot of other ladies. It helped explain her feeling for the blacks. She had decency.

"She also had a lot of enemies and I suppose I'll get flack from some, saying how dare I make people love Lillian. But I just wish we had a few more Lillians. What we're lacking nowadays is indi-($155,000) was paid Thursday for a bottle of Bordeaux believed by some experts to have been made for Thomas Jefferson. The 1787 Chiteau Lafitte was inscribed with the vintage and the letters "Th.J." It was bought by Forbes Magazine of New York at Christie's in London. It's nice to know that some of Mr. Jefferson's wine is finally coming home." said Christopher Forbes, 35, a son of the publisher Malcolm Forbes. He said the wine would be added to the family's collection of American presidential relics. It was sold by Hardy Rodenstock, a music nuhlisher from Wieshaden, West Germany, who said it was found earlier this year among more than a. dozen bottles of Bordeaux behind a cellar wall in an old house in Paris.

A college lecturer in Scotland says Andrea Mantegna's "Adoration of the Magi." for which the J. Ex-perts who know the Italian Renaissance picture dismissed the claim It's absolute rot," said Timothy Clifford, director of the National Gallery in Edinburgh, where the work is on display. His comment of followed a lecture by Peter Collins at the Duncan of Jordanstone College of Art in Dundee. Collins, 50. spoke about his doubts after arguing his case in letters to newspapers. The Times of London devoted half a page to the subject Wednesday. No one agrees with Collins so far, wrote the newspaper's art sales reporter, Geraldine Norman, adding: "For my money, it's genu-ine." Collins contends that a metal vessel in the picture looks like a 19th-century hookah base, that the turbans of the Magi are not those of Mantegna's day, that the Virgin is wearing a turban and that her robe appears to have a lapel, and that two of the figures appear to be borrowed from other Mantegna. works, William Mostyn-Owen, who cataloged the painting for Chrisarguments "nonsensical."
